Adjusting the color and light values of an image Photoshop has the ability to adjust the individual colors and tones in an image — not just the colors but also the lightness and shadows. I cover this process of adjusting colors and light in a little more detail in the upcoming section "Applying Color Fill Effects to an Image." But to get you started, follow these tips: * **Create a new blank layer and select the Gradient tool.** * When you first begin working with a blank layer, the color and light values of the layer's pixels are set to the default color values. To change the default color values, select a new layer on the Canvas, and the default color values remain untouched until you switch to a new color choice

Blogger Interview: Not In My Backyard A few weeks ago, I interviewed Johnny Sansone, the lead singer of Not In My Backyard, a New York City band whose song "Born Under the Sign of Alright" appeared on the current, Grammy nominated episode of "Glee." When I asked the band's bassist and co-songwriter, Jason Wainwright, how the performance went, his answer is what prompted me to ask for another opportunity for a visit. "I don't even really know what to say. It was...a bit of a blur," Wainwright recalled. "We have a ways to go." But the NYC-born band has progressed far beyond a local, secret punchline. It has managed to attract attention from the public media and from industry insiders, as seen by the success of its NPR song, "Crazy," which was performed on NBC's Today Show and on the third season of "Glee." Wainwright also opened up about the current trajectory of the band, as well as the strain it puts on the members, from their manager to an ever-changing line-up. From all of the band members' different experiences, Wainwright came to the conclusion that Not In My Backyard isn't a musical project. "[I]t's not about creating music, it's about creating art. Every day, we create something artful for other people. As long as you're doing that, you're doing what you're supposed to be doing." Click through the gallery for a condensed version of the interview: What do you mean when you say Not In My Backyard isn't a musical project? We try not to say it's a musical project because it's kind of alienating to a lot of people. If we had to fit into one category, it's a band. But the people we know would probably identify it as a tribute band. It's a band because we have four-man troupes where we can practice a song for five to eight hours a day for three to four weeks, but it's a tribute band because we don't really write our own songs. We're more influenced by bands that have come before us. Do you think the point of a tribute band is to emulate others who have come before you? It's not about creating music, it's about creating art. Every day, we create something artful for other people. As

New York Mayor Bill de Blasio won a second term in a landslide over his Republican challenger in Tuesday's primary election. De Blasio's Tuesday triumph came after his first bid for office in 2013 was considered a surprising victory for a Democratic socialist. He defeated former Council Speaker Christine Quinn in the Democratic mayoral primary after winning six years as a four-term city councilman representing the Manhattan borough. With 89 percent of precincts reporting, he was leading with 65 percent, according to the Associated Press. De Blasio campaigned on a platform of reforming New York's schools and "solving" inequality between wealthy and poor. He touted his progressive record in the city, saying he was "foremost a pragmatist" and had attempted to win the support of the real estate industry to improve the economy. De Blasio was the first Democratic candidate to release a tax plan in February, and in a statement Tuesday, he said he still plans to form a task force to analyze the details. "I have been clear that I will never stop fighting to make New York City the fairest, best governed city in the world," he said. The mayor's victory is another sign of liberal strength in America. In New York, the mayor is in charge of the city budget, schools and public transit. He is also in charge of the New York City Police Department, which he pledged to reform in 2013. The congressman won his congressional bid as a Democrat. But during the general election, Cuomo faced criticism from Democrats and progressive groups that he is too conservative on social issues. One of his Republican challengers in the primary election called for Cuomo to stay away from New York City as mayor if he won the election. The two met at a debate earlier this month. Cuomo has proposed a path to citizenship for the nation's estimated 11 million undocumented immigrants and said he supports legalizing gay marriage. His campaign said he wants to keep abortion "safe, legal and rare." In the GOP primary, Barbara Buono won the nomination of the Working Families Party and other

Democratic and Republican allies to challenge Cuomo. She said she supported Cuomo's support for abortion rights. She accused Cuomo of being beholden to "the trial lawyers and the drug companies." Her website showed a woman lying on a backboard with a backpack loaded with drugs and guns. Cuomo has the backing of numerous labor unions. Buono spoke on Tuesday to a room full of union members and supporters. "We need to
