A: Autodesk, who is the author of AutoCAD and other software products used to be a big software company that makes huge amounts of money. They have been quite successful, and as a result of this, they think that they deserve to be paid for their software. So they want to make money by controlling how the users of their software use their software. That's the key to every scam. If you buy a book and if you decide to say that you don't like it and that you don't want to buy it, then the author thinks that you are losing his/her money. Some people use "good" software to protect their company, money or bank account. If you use a solution that puts your money in the coffers of an company that wants to control how people use software and in which the user loses control, then this is no longer "good". I'm more concerned with how their software handles key information. I feel that I'm compromising security if I use their key without a full understanding of the situation. I'm willing to put up with a little inconvenience to avoid that compromise. If you don't put up with the risk of "compromising security", then you can use all the software that you want without paying any money. I won't pay to use software, but I do understand that this means that people who are paid to produce software have to charge users to use their software. That may be sad, but the money is not coming from me. At the end of the day I want to put a wrench into their work. I want to make their day a little more difficult. That is a good thing. I will happily give them trouble for their trouble. So you need to make the day of the Autodesk crackers a
