Motion technology developed by EA Sports Labs is now being applied to the field players, giving “Real Player Motion” a modern update to make the world's best football players' movements look more realistic. With Virtual Performance Coaching on a player’s skill, strength and stamina, players will be able to fine-tune their technique to improve their performance in the most realistic way possible. “Our goal with Fifa 22 Cracked Accounts was to take what we’ve learned from years of work on soccer video games and apply that to the sports genre,” said Domenic Slominski, Head of Sports Technology at EA SPORTS. “Creating a more realistic experience has always been important to us, and we’re excited to collaborate with our development partners and with the world’s top players on this project.” HyperMotion Technology

The core of FIFA 22 is HyperMotion Technology, a new way to run the game. Players can now play a complete football match using the latest in motion capture. Players will collect data from more than 20 players in motion capture suits—a number that will increase as the technology is developed further in FIFA 21. The hyper motion data collected from the real-life players will be used to power the hyper motions on the pitch for more precise and realistic controls. The player’s movements, tackles, aerial duels and on-ball actions are the core elements that will be powered by the data. If a player has a precise, powerful header, for example, the player’s tech-determined movement will react with the player’s core data that the player collected from playing a game of real-life football. The goal is to make their game actions feel more unique and unscripted, because there’s always an element of player interaction to what they’re doing on the pitch.
