In recent years, many companies have designed and marketed products to increase the recycling of glass, plastic, and other such materials. However, recycling companies are overwhelmed by the volume of items requiring recycling.

Furthermore, old items made of glass tend to crack and crush poorly, which often requires smoothing or reforming before they can be reused. Products such as those disclosed by ArcaRama (Tramonti, Lorenzo) in U.S. Pat. Nos. 4,132,666 and 5,059,103 teach complicated designs for making glass more recyclable. Their designs combine glass, plastic, and other materials to maximize their recycling. Thus, as they literally “recycle” the material, the customer loses efficiency and speed and must sort through all these materials in order to recover each waste product in its pre-crushed form. In recent years, companies have developed machines which use a combination of grinding and heat to recover glass for reuse. Traditional glass recycling machines use a roll covered with diamonds; when the
