Transient end-plate heterogeneity in adult rabbit skeletal muscle. During the development of motor end plates in chick hindlimb muscle, acetylcholine receptors from the postjunctional membrane area fuse with the cell membrane to form a line of cells that extends across the motor end plate, a process known as heterogeneous end-plate growth. The developmental transformation of the end-plate area from a centrally located and punctate to a peripheral and elongated configuration has been studied morphologically in several systems. In this study, we examined the development of end-plate heterogeneity in adult rabbit hindlimb muscle. The hindlimb muscle of postnatal animals ranging from 6-80 days of age was processed for light and electron microscopy. Heterogeneous end plates were present throughout the postnatal period examined. Transitional events associated with these heterogeneous and homogeneous end plates included myofiber degeneration and macrophage invasion as well as the growth of neuromuscular spindle and myotendinous junctions. Heterogeneous and homogeneous end plates were observed within a given muscle along all of its length. Differentiation of the heterogeneous end-plate into a peripheral line occurred at approximately the 26th day of age. As in the developing chick, the transition was marked by the development of aggregates of acetylcholine receptors from the postjunctional membrane area. The transient and unique pattern of heterogeneous growth of the end-plate area in adult skeletal muscle suggests a developmental difference between postjunctional membrane growth and more traditional membranous growth. Personally, you're welcome to make more of it than you already have. I mean, your wife doesn't have to stick around to see it. Maybe you should name the restaurant something that you know they'll eat. The truth is, if you're a nice guy, there's an excellent chance you're going to be able to give a nice guy a nice break. And if she's not interested, you need to act like it's not a big deal. This is what I tell my students when they're writing about their romantic relationships. I tell them to be honest with themselves (and

. Transatlantic Calling Rudolph Bauer: Parents of Children Who Went Off. Unable to connect to the Internet at home. Blog Stats Biting the hand that feeds you I discovered this photo on my Facebook news feed this morning. Normally, I ignore this news feed but this morning I stopped to look at a photo of a dog holding up a taxi sign. The caption reads "A woman in this picture was given a ticket for trying to break into a house by a cab driver." It turns out that the person who uploaded the photo was a cab driver from Wisconsin. He must have sat through some internet videos on how to "outsmart the bad guys" and decided to implement his lessons while driving around the city of Milwaukee in a cab. Not very wise. I got to thinking about the predicament that he found himself in. He is a cab driver who makes $20 an hour. "If" the woman in the picture had failed to pay her fare, he would have been writing off $20 an hour. Now we are finding out that he has lost a little over $240 dollars from this photo. If you add the interest rate into the equation, this cab driver may end up losing over $1,000 in the next year. This is what really strikes me about this story, the fact that he was able to come up with this example of "you bite the hand that feeds you" in this situation. As a college student, I receive $1,000 per month in financial aid. Would I try to break into a house to collect that kind of money? I doubt it. This would be a fool's errand and my financial aid would not cover the cost of the broken window, the $1,000 security deposit, the $1,000 replacement fee. We live in a society that still views the middle class as being the ones who take the risks to make the system work. This story was an example of what happens when the system fails to provide safety to those who play by the rules. Because of my other stories and articles on ethics, I am sure that this cab driver will realize that he did not need to put himself in this situation. This story does not end with him losing money; it ends with him losing his livelihood. Other instances of "you bite the hand that feeds you" have been on my mind lately. Not from the world of finance, but from world

MISSION This website was designed to provide a voice for all unarmed citizens who want freedom, not because someone tells them to live that way, but they will live that way because it is right to be free. There is nothing wrong with wanting good, nutritious, quality food, and good coffee. Well, what if you simply don't have money to buy what you want, but you know you need them more than anything else in the world. Well, you get out of bed in the morning and go out to look for food, and that's if you have the strength to get to the market place. What if you are an innocent civilian, and a war starts up, then you are caught in the middle, living in the area that the war is starting up in, and at that time your home is being blown up, or somebody shoots your family, or your children, or you live there.
