What's new:

I thought of leaving a neutral comment but it seems like that is unfair so I have left no comment and I didn't request any change. The way you communicate with your customers is disgusting. I want to feel pity for you that you end up having so many customer feedback. The main thing from other customers is what they want is to have the screenshots that the developers have wanted to give, but they never have given. Why do you have done that in your game development like so? As a user, I can tell you that what you don't have are screenshots. It has been a while, and a lot of things have happened in the realm. But first, I would like to give you an update on some bigger things that might directly or indirectly affect us, or might influence our future game development. I had intended to create a post for this the other day but kept forgetting about it... well, I had it written for like half an hour yesterday and so I immediately started to read it, and it turned out to be this length, so. Oh well. Game progress: Everything really, really, went as well as it could possibly go. I had asked to take a while off. Instead of taking a while off, I took over 200-some hours. I think that I spent a little over 10 hours a day thinking about the game over the past few weeks, or something like that (it's been a while since I've been this involved in something.). I guess it would be like a six-day work week. Anything above that, and I would likely get a bit burned out, or stress-out. Anyway, I will be taking some time off for four weeks soon. Game progress: It is in its final phase. The end is near! I've put the finishing touches on the major features of the game, (pathfinding, locations). I've also wrote up the final chapter of the story to tell the ending, and have some inscriptions that I'd like to show off (in fact, I have them up now on the website: - they are down the bottom if you scroll down a bit). I had intended to make the site an exclusive giveaway for those who wanted/needed the website to pre-sell, but instead had decided to hand it out as a nice surprise because I think it's more fun like that. Game progress: Still working on
